The enzymatic synthesis of dansylated amino acid and peptide derivatives is an attractive procedure for application in biophysical and biochemical assay development. The protocol provides the opportunity to couple secondary amines to amino acids to give conjugates with alkaline pH optimized stability properties. The approach has been applied for the development of membrane-soluble, photoactive, and fluorescent derivatives of a variety of biological targets including kinases, phosphatases, proteases, and receptors. Two principal approaches have been used to increase the sensitivity and specificity of this enzyme-linked coupling: first, the use of free dansyl groups covalently bound to a solid support to enrich, purify, and characterize these conjugates; second, the generation of artificial enzyme-substrate pairs by employing complementary enzymes with complementary substrates.Q: Deserializing a SOAP request/response to a POJO class I have a simple web service that is used to execute queries against the database.
